

Melita Rant

Teaching and research assistant at Faculty of Economics, University of Ljubljana

Melita Rant is a teaching and research assistant of management and organization at the Department for management and organization, University of Ljubljana, Faculty of Economics.

Her research is focused on issues of coevolution, organizational development and change, organizational identity and organizational decision making through relativist (symbolic interpretive) and complexity theory perspective by application of research methods of multilevel hierarchical modeling and quantitative narrative analysis.

She is a member of international scientific associations of EURAM and EGOS.

She received Faculty award for extraordinary study achievements and the Prešeren Award for her graduate thesis on finance and accounting (1998). She has M.Sc. in economics (2001) and Ph.d. in management and organization, in which she explored organizational adaptations from dynamic organizational fit perspective.

As a member of Department for management and organization, she covers the following courses: Management, Organizational analysis; Organizational design; Organizational theories.

She was a member of several research and counseling project on organizational change and redesign (Macro and micro organizational redesign of electro-distribution system on Republic of Slovenia; Strategic turnover of hotel chain LifeClass; Finance, economics and governance of Slovenian castles; Knowledge management in Slovenian army).